

The Skidmo' Daily

February 3, 2017

The Skidmo' Daily

February 3, 2017

- George Lubitz* 2 Letter From the Editor
- George Lubitz* 3 He's President Now, Get Used To It," Says Man Who Threw A Fit When McDonald's Stopped Serving McRib.
- Pauline Dent* 3 Professor Doesn't Mind When Students Call Him Daddy
- Nick Papazian* 3 Campus Safety Hesitant About Giving Student Fragrance Beads
- Carson Daly* 4 Skidmo' Horrorscope
- Lizette Roman-Johnston* 5 Skidmore Female Re-registers as Republican to Prove She Is Not Like Other Girls
- Doug Patrick* 5 Friend Relieved to Have Checked Odyssey Article's Title Before Sharing it
- George Lubitz* 5 Student Trades Up From Extension Cord To Hot Plate At Fire Safety Exchange Program
- George Lubitz* 6 Crossword
- Linnea Harris* 7 You're An Asshole, And That's Okay
- Emily Lay-Spack* 7 Ex-Boyfriend Says He's "Over It, So Why Are You Writing a Skidmo' Daily Article About it, Emily?"
- Gill Hurtig* 7 Dhall Swiper Kid Says he's "Done Being Known Only as Dhall Swiper Kid" Says Dhall Swiper Kid
- Hannah Kotler* 8 Local White Boy from Your High School Drops Out of College to Pursue Rap Career
- Quint Turner* 8 Freshman Growing a Beard

Letter From the Editor...

Greetings,

Jacob Schwartz didn't write anything for this week's edition. Especially shameful, considering this is our first edition of the semester. I don't know...but if he keeps slacking on articles I'm just going to kick him off the E-board. There's a quota you have to reach to be an E-board member. That's true—it's in our club's charter. Not to disparage him or anything, but he has to know that we set expectations for our writers and ranking members alike.

In other news, we will now have CROSSWORD PUZZLES in every edition. Yeah, and none of that dumb-ass DiscoveryKids bullshit, either. What with the random floating tiles in white space with no real puzzle element whatsoever. What is that? It may have passed in grade school, but no longer. I mean the real deal, like the stuff you'd see in The New York Times. So we don't fuck around. Enjoy!

Back to Jake for a second. And I don't mean to belabor anything, but I mean come on! He's a good writer—we need him to supply content not just when he wants, but always. He became Secretary not on a whim, but because he showed dedication to his craft and the club. You can't just shirk responsibility once you're on the E-board. I'm sorry, I'll move on.

So, yeah. Crossword puzzles, lots of news...what else....what else? Horoscopes as always. Particularly good this week.

Whatever, I can't really focus. I'm still pretty peeved about Jake's shenanigans. Just read the paper, but keep in mind you won't find anything from Jake.

Best as always,

George Lubitz

Editor-in-Chief

“He’s President Now, Get Used To It,” Says Man Who Threw A Fit When McDonald’s Stopped Serving McRib.

by George Lubitz

MECHANICVILLE, NY—As local resident Dale Rickard passed by a small group of anti-Trump protesters in his pickup this past week, he leaned out the window to scream “he’s our president now, get used to it! Ya buncha snowflakes,” woefully forgetful of the fact that just a few years earlier Mr. Rickard literally protested in a McDonald’s when he learned the McRib was no longer on the menu.

“They need to accept change. We’ve had Obama screw us over for the past eight years. It’s real America’s turn now,” Mr. Rickard told this reporter, leaving out the important detail that he had at one point demanded to see a manager at his local McDonald’s and then shrieked, “This is America and I demand a McRib!” with tears reportedly welling up in his eyes.

“I just don’t get why these liberals are out here protesting Trump. He’s already president; what do they think this belly aching is going to do? Bring NO-bama back? Not gonna happen,” Mr. Rickard continued, who seemed to completely forget the terribly embarrassing scene he caused at McDonald’s store number 1152, where he yanked a chair into the center of the restaurant, sat down, and announced to the scared employees and gawking customers that he would not be leaving until he had a McRib in his possession. He then was reported to have harassed passing-by families by asking them to join his resistance but spat at them when they ignored his invitation to join in protest.

“Trump is going to make America great again!” Mr. Rickard concluded, which was awfully reminiscent of the time he bellowed “You are ruining America!” to hard-working employees over the fact that food item was no longer being offered.

Professor Doesn’t Mind When Students Call Him Daddy

At 57, Professor Grey of the Sociology department found himself divorced, infertile and incontinent. Rejected by all of his juvenile relatives, Grey tells the Skidmo’ Daily he decided to allow his students to call him “Daddy.” An expert in human relationships, Grey rejects the idea of biological parentage. “Paternity is a social construct” He states “What even is DNA?”

Grey swears his new pseudonym isn’t sexual, “Although that is an added bonus” He winks

Following his announcement Professor Grey was confronted by various members of the community including the administration and Skidmore Editorial who claimed his new policy was “wildly inappropriate”. Glotzbach was particularly disturbed stating that Grey had crossed the line when he claimed such a title. “Who does he think he is? I’m Dad” As of yet, no students have come forward to admit they call Professor Grey, “Daddy”.

However, it is rumored that one French International student called him by his preferred name until he was briefed by other students as to what it meant. Despite several warnings Professor Grey continues to embrace the role of “pseudo dad” with arms wide open. Literally.

Campus Safety Hesitant About Giving Student Fragrance Beads

by Nick Papazian

This Tuesday was the fire safety exchange day. This is a day where students can turn in extension cords, candles, and other fire hazards to the campus safety office, where they will be rewarded with either a surge protector or fragrance beads to replace their hazardous items. Normally, this goes off without a hitch, but this year campus expressed concern about a certain exchange.

“I don’t know what the big deal is,” Ken Damon, the owner of the flamethrower, told Skidmo’. “I know it’s a fire hazard and I just want some goddamn fragrance beads. I don’t even think this thing is loaded.” He pulled the triggers to show me, and a 40 foot flame was hurled into the woods behind his apartment. “Well, now it isn’t.” He sighed and added, “It’s frustrating: you try to play by the rules and give your flamethrower over to campus safety and they won’t even give you fragrance beads for being so honest and upstanding and you steal your grandfather’s old army flamethrower from the shed behind your house so you have something to exchange for more fragrance beads.”

When we asked Ken why he was so fixated on the issue, he replied, “because I love fragrance beads, and this is the only way I can get them. I don’t know where to buy fragrance beads. When I ask people, they just laugh at me. I need fragrance beads. Sometimes, I put them in a large ziplock bag and then put my head in the bag and just stay there for awhile. I also wash myself with them. This is the only time that I can get fragrance beads, so I brought in a bigger and more valuable fire hazard to get more beads. I need them.”

Many campus safety officers refused to talk about the event, but eventually one campus safety officer agreed to talk to Skidmo’ about the problem.

“We’re just not sure if we should give this student extra fragrance beads in exchange for his M2 flamethrower,” said the officer, who wished to remain anonymous. “We feel that might be rewarding bad behavior.”

UPDATE: Since these interviews have taken place, firefighters have initiated efforts to slow the advance of the North Woods forest fire, and campus safety has hastily agreed to give Ken all of their fragrance beads in exchange for his flamethrower, after an argument between the student and campus safety “got heated”.

Skidmo' Horoscope #12ish

Welcome to the new and improved Skidmo' Horoscope! We innovated and evolved to fit into the ever increasing market. Don't worry though, we're keeping all your favorite signs! We got Aquarius, Libra, others! Now sit back, relax, and waste your precious time.

Aquarius:

Your time is OVER! You hear me? Done. Pack your shit and get the f*ck out. Don't censor me you f*cking assh*le. They need to hear this sh*t. R*ally? Tha* one wasn*t even profanity. *Il-right, this is g*tting ridiculous. Y*u cen*ored a comma. *     dick.

Pices:

These Pices are so low we're practically giving them away! Come on down! These won't last long with Pices this low! I can hardly believe my eyes at how low they are! Borderline suicidal.

Aries:

Never trust a man with less than seven fingers. Seven is fine, six is too low.

Taurus:

You're on top of your game! Ford's sign of the year for the ninth consecutive year. Unheard of! Once again, Tom Ford has named his own sign as the sign of the year. Good for you! If you keep this kind of traction you can go anywhere.

Gemini:

Does anyone else think "California" on Childish Gambino's new album is a dud? The rest of the album is great; I just can't bring myself to enjoy that one. His voice is too weird. Anyway, Gemini, just like don't kill anyone, or do. I really don't care. I guess just don't get caught. Good luck with your murder!

Cancer:

You're hanging in there! Great job! No one gave you a bear's shot in hell. You should get your affairs in order though, just in case. Just saying.

Leo:

The stars are in alignment! Your sign is extremely in touch with the universe this week. Connections will start to surface that you never thought possible; your words will come out effortlessly, you will see the guy you like at Dhall, you will realize 9/11 was an inside job.

Virgo:

The world is danger today. Don't go outside.

Libra:

Please subscribe to Skidmo' Gold to gain access to Libra's horoscope.

Scorpio:

Did you know Scorpio is an anagram for Crpoois? Well get ready for your fair share of it. Crpoois is all around you! This is your month to shine so bright that your roommate can't sleep and misses his Calculus test tomorrow.

Sagittarius:

Look at you. You sexy bastard. Ugh. Amazing. I really don't even need to write this, you're prefect. You know what? You should be writing these. You ingenious Greek god. This one is a little played out, right? "Oh, its so funny, the guy writing it is a Sagittarius. Ha." Well fuck you, this isn't easy. Deal with it.

Capricorn:

Struggle is a part of life, but you know that. Struggle is where you thrive. You're always turning round and round but you always seem to do exactly what you need to. When the heat is on, you're at your best. It builds and builds until POP! Every kernel in you explodes into what it was always meant to be.

Skidmore Female Re-registers as Republican to Prove She Is Not Like Other Girls

by Lizette Roman-Johnston

When Kelly Ulrich began her first year at Skidmore, she expected to perpetuate the reputation she developed in high school. In a sea of salmon shorts and Hunter boots, Kelly marched to the beat of her own drum, and everybody knew it. She wore beanies instead of Lululemon headbands, because they don't sell Lululemon at thrift shops. Sure, the lice is a pain, but three bucks for a beanie? What a bargain!

Once Kelly went to college, however, she felt less alone. It was a horrible realization. Boys and girls wore Birkenstocks through the seasons. Ugly sweaters were ugly no more. There were zero football jocks! Instead of sticking out like a sore thumb, she fit in like a healthy finger.

Scrolling through her Facebook feed, skimming through countless political rants, Kelly realized what she needed to do. The backlash against Trump's presidency flooded her timeline, as all her Skidmore Facebook friends are democrats. She told The Skidmo'Daily, "I saw all these girls posting anti-Trump statuses and getting three hundred or so likes. Is that all it takes to get recognition these days? Being a democrat? Sounds too easy."

Refusing to lose her uniqueness to politics, Kelly went online and printed some forms. Remembering what her dad always told her about being a special snowflake, the first-year checked the box for Republican. Before sealing the envelope, Kelly took a picture of the form and posted it to Facebook with the caption "I took the road less traveled by, and that has made all the difference."

Friend Relieved to Have Checked Odyssey Article's Title Before Sharing it

by Doug Patrick

Miranda Benjamins ('20) dodged a bullet this past week when she went to share a friend's most recent Odyssey article on Facebook. Benjamins assumed the article, along with other Odyssey publications, was extremely nuanced, provided quality information, and was well-written. However, when the friend gave her the link, Benjamins noticed the article, "Why I'm Sick of Feminism," may contain rhetoric she does not necessarily agree with.

"I usually just share it and say something like: Check out my gorgeous friend, she's such an amazing writer," Benjamins said. "I never read them, sometimes I didn't even look at the titles—I was relieved I did this time."

Since the incident, Benjamins has investigated her newsfeed's past to dig up what other articles she may have accidentally shared. "An Open Letter to Open Letters," "Why Affirmative Action is Unfair to White People," and "10 Reasons Obama Hates America," are just a few of the titles Miranda found.

"I'm a shocked," Benjamins said, in disbelief of what she had distributed to the world without taking a second look. Then, after a moment of silence, she said, "Odyssey should really try to employ some editors, or at least get some form of quality control."

Student Trades Up From Extension Cord To Hot Plate At Fire Safety Exchange Program

by George Lubitz

ROUNDS HALL—While the Fire Safety Exchange Program was originally designed to offer students the chance to surrender prohibited items without penalization, no questions asked, one Skidmore student saw the event as a prime opportunity to walk in with an extension cord and walk out with a brand new hot plate.

A la the classic "Chain of Deals" television trope, Freshman Tim Esposito realized that he could start off with a modest piece of wire and, through bartering, trade his way up to a tabletop burner.

Tim was reported to talk-up the necessity and versatility of his gray Belkin-brand extension cord to a nearby student in possession of a half-used Yankee Candle. Impressed with his pitch, the once-candle owner traded Tim for his cord and he moved on to the next unsuspecting sap.

"After that, they were like putty in my hands. I found this one kid with a killer halogen desk lamp and I told him that my candle could do all the work of his lamp, and then some. He was a little dubious at first, but after I pretended like I didn't even want the thing anymore, he came running back."

The student in question reportedly also threw in a canister of Zippo lighter fluid to sweeten the deal, as per the effects of the psychological game of capitalism Tim was playing.

"Next," continued Tim, "I found a girl with a rice cooker. I told her the thing was basically worthless, but I'd be happy to take it off her hands and donate my lighter fluid and lamp in good faith. She didn't even think twice. Score!"

After ten more minutes, Tim made quick work of his scheme. He traded the rice cooker for a pile of tapestries, the tapestries for a space heater, the space heater for four bed risers and another set of candles, and those for a hot water kettle before finally trading up the kettle for a hot plate.

"It was like taking candy from a baby," said Tim, who walked away from the exchange program looking like Gordon Gekko.

SKIDMO' DAILY CROSSWORD | EDITED BY WILL SHORTZ

Puzzle by George Lubitz

ACROSS

- 1 Many a Skidmore student and music department professor
- 5 On Trump's speed dial after Melania divorce
- 10 Terminate
- 11 Comes before 69...and dine
- 13 A particle with a charge
- 14 School based in Troy, NY
- 15 He/she has in Oaxaca
- 16 News network known for gimmicky reporting
- 17 East in Berlin
- 18 2-to-3-year certification in the UK
- 19 Greek philosopher whose name sounds like a popular modeling clay
- 21 Badgers
- 22 Ready in Nice
- 23 A car with many defects
- 26 Disney's Queen of Arendelle
- 28 "Her" is its indirect object
- 29 Clothing chain which utilizes a racetrack layout

DOWN

- 31 Received
- 33 "___ the season"
- 35 "I will," in text speak
- 36 Cranberry juice is a common prevention
- 37 For 40-Down, it's a negative
- 38 Government body responsible for patting-down bodies
- 41 With the letter to the left, a novice videogamer
- 42 Just before darkness
- 44 "Very," in SMS language
- 46 A college student's favorite meal...on a budget
- 48 3 on a grandfather clock
- 51 The President's favorite word to end a tweet
- 53 Give one a hand in Barcelona, say
- 54 Uni notorious for not selling coffee on campus
- 55 Visibly buoyant
- 56 Goals

- 1 Peruses the internet, say
- 2 Drafts
- 3 "Consider it done"
- 4 Famous airship in StarFox
- 5 Like a bed & breakfast
- 6 Julia Louis-Dreyfus role
- 7 Its capital is Managua
- 8 Footballer Amadou
- 9 Book-mark
- 12 MacGuyver'd bombs, say
- 15 A meme which facetiously expresses gratitude to the 44th president
- 20 Records
- 21 No in Vanuatu
- 24 Expression of indifference
- 25 "I, also"
- 26 Has a Dutch disease
- 27 Pre-law exams

- 30 The first half of a recent movie title, with the circled tiles spelling out the second as an anagram. 49-Down and 50-Down are major plot elements.
- 32 Hockey sudden death (abbr.)
- 34 Dr. Frankenstein's assistant
- 39 Cutesy suffix often added to "brew" or "bro"
- 40 Government body responsible for Rovers
- 43 Game with the goal of losing all one's cards
- 45 British counter-terrorist grp., with a lisp
- 47 Often has "Welcome" stitched on top
- 49 Computer often referred to as "Big Blue"
- 50 How I spelled "eyes" when I was 5
- 52 "Keep it on the ___"

You're An Asshole, And That's Okay The Odyssey Online

By Linnea Harris

The road to self-acceptance is long and difficult – especially when so many people disapprove of the very things that make you YOU. Yet, one cannot prosper without self-love, so here are six signs that YOU TOO are an asshole, and WHY THAT'S OKAY. Hopefully, they'll help you accept yourself for who you truly are.

1. You don't support the Women's Marches

It's OKAY to feel uncomfortable that your male supremacy is being threatened by women/individuals that identify with other genders or identities/other severely oppressed groups vying for basic human rights. You want to preserve our society built on patriarchal values in order to uphold your own dominance, AND THAT'S OKAY.

2. You're a dude that identifies as "pro-life"

It's totally reasonable that you believe you're entitled to an opinion about whether or not a women/individual with a uterus should be allowed to make decisions regarding their own body! Since you'll never be put in that position, you're obviously able to empathize with them! You want to weigh in on this decision that has absolutely nothing to do with you and that you'll never fully understand, AND THAT'S OKAY.

3. You actively complain about "liberal crybabies" on Facebook and/or you've used the term "liberal snowflake" in conversation before

Ah yes – the inconsequential lives of other people being threatened or destroyed, what an annoying thing to see on your Facebook feed. People around you will have basic human rights taken away from them, but their worries are nothing but an annoying buzzing in your ear that you want to stop, AND THAT'S OKAY.

4. At least once, you've found yourself saying, "I'm not a racist, but..."

You want to express your racist views without being called a racist, AND THAT'S OKAY.

5. At least once, you've found yourself saying something like, "I support gay people people, but..."

You want to express your homophobic and heteronormative views without being called homophobic, AND THAT'S OKAY.

6. You share Tomi Lahren videos on Facebook

Because she has some pretty good points, right? You think her points are pretty valid and her unpleasantness is really relatable to you, AND THAT'S OKAY.

Life is all about accepting yourself for who you are – instead of feeling ashamed of the values and quirky characteristics that make you YOU, show to world your true colors: you're an asshole, AND THAT'S OKAY.

Ex-Boyfriend Says He's "Over It, So Why Are You Writing a Skidmo' Daily Article About it, Emily?"¹

By Emily Lay-Spack

SKIDMORE COLLEGE – After a recent, completely mutual break-up (and no, I don't agree with those who argue the phrase "completely mutual break-up" kind of undermines its believability) between two Skidmore first-years, the atmosphere on campus has felt different. It's just gloomier. Drabber. Dark. Hopeless. Desperate (take me back). These were the reasons explained to ex-boyfriend Derek Spencer when he claimed he was over it and then asked this reporter why she was writing a story about it.

Though he may not agree, there's no denying this feeling is palpable around Skidmore. Ask anyone and they'll tell you; just like these real accounts I gathered around campus:

Franky Velveeta ('18) said, "Everything's been [horrible]."

George Lincoln ('20) said, "I've been fine so far," and smiled—clearly trying to shield me from the hurt behind his tired eyes.

And my mom ('83) said, "God dammit, [Derek], you've gotta stop [breaking people's hearts], everyone's going to think you're a [fucking dickhead]."

When those interviewed were told that everything could be fixed if the ex-girlfriend just tried to be a little less "clingy," and the ex-boyfriend just understood that she's "clingy" because she loves him and has never known love before so sorry she's "clingy," and also if he stopped being a dick when he's with his friends sometimes, they all unanimously agreed they would want the couple to get back together as soon as possible (I miss you).

¹ See, George? I included the full quote; it's "fair" or whatever now.

Dhall Swiper Kid Says he's "Done Being Known Only as Dhall Swiper Kid" Says Dhall Swiper Kid

By Gill Hurtig

When first learning that he would work in the Atrium seven hours a week as his form of work study, dhall swiper kid, a Freshman, was delighted. In his eyes this was the best job that a Freshman could hope for. He had feared he would have to work in the dining hall, dishing up vegetable Lo Mein and wiping tables until he could find a more suitable job the next year. He knew that working at the Atrium meant card swiping, which (obviously) meant a lot of face exposure toward all the cool people who knew where the parties were. With any luck, this would be his path to popularity at Skidmore College.

But talking to him in December, he seemed very adamant on changing the identity that he had built after his first semester in college. Swiper kid said, “Yea everybody just calls me swiper kid. I really don’t appreciate it cause that’s all anyone knows me as. Like I have a name!”

As a result, swiper kid has begun the difficult quest to make friends with Juniors and Seniors who never really use dhal. But reportedly he has run into trouble because the upperclassmen all go to the bars and early in the year he got his fake ID taken away. Swiper kid mentioned “I felt confident going into DA’s that my ID wouldn’t get taken, but I gave my card to the bouncer and he looked at it and asked me my name. I got flustered and since everyone was calling me ‘swiper kid’ that’s the name I said! The bouncer took my ID and now I don’t have any friends.”

After interviewing swiper kid I feel pretty bad for him. Thankfully he will only have to be swiper kid for another few months, and then he can try to get a new job. Let’s just all hope for his sake that it’s not as a Teaching Helper On Thursdays, which students would undoubtedly just shorten to THOT.

Local White Boy from Your High School Drops Out of College to Pursue Rap Career

By Hannah Kotler

Skidmore freshman, Jane Lewis, exclusively sat down with Skidmo’ Daily recently to talk about a particularly harrowing winter break experience she felt needed to be shared with her fellow peers. Citing improper warning from her “cooler because they are older than her” college friends, Jane says she was taken aback by the interaction she faced while on break- one she never knew she would have to face in her white, suburban neighborhood grocery store. Holding back tears, Jane recalls her leisurely stroll down the milk aisle, when she spotted fellow Washington High School alum Aiden Thomas. According to Jane: “Aiden and I went to high school together but we weren’t really good friends. We had pre-calc class together and were both on the track team, but that was pretty much it. Sometimes he texted me for homework help and tried to keep the conversation going, but I generally ignored him because he was always a little weird.” Jane says she decided to say hi to him that day in the grocery store out of politeness, and also because he had seen her walking in his direction and she couldn’t get out of it at that point. Says Jane, “I did the usual routine: a standard greeting mixed with an insincere question about how he liked college. But nothing could prepare me for what happened next.” Aiden proceeded to tell Jane about how college “just wasn’t for him” and how he dropped out already so he could pursue his rap career. Jane says she didn’t know what to say as Aiden is “a quintessential white boy from the suburbs with absolutely no talent or hardships in life that could motivate him in any way or be compelling enough to channel musically.” However, Aiden took Jane’s silence in the moment as a cue to show her his SoundCloud account. Jane recalls: “After telling me this astonishing news, he unlocks his phone (which was already logged on to the SoundCloud app) and starts playing his latest work. It had about the same sound quality as a voiceover I did for a Spanish project in the 7th grade and the lyrics mentioned something called ‘the struggle’-which I’m guessing is a concept Aiden is vastly misinformed on.” Nonetheless, Jane was forced to describe it as “dope” to Aiden’s face and cringe through the next five songs before she could leave. Skidmo’ Daily was granted exclusive access to Aiden’s SoundCloud, and we do, in fact, confirm that it is not “dope.” Jane wanted to conclude the interview with two messages to the readers. The first was that she would like people to think of her not as a victim, but as an inspiration to all those out there forced to listen to the shitty music of their former high school peers’ misguided rap careers. The second message, in her own words: “if Aiden’s out there reading, I’d just like to say that if you ever make it big in the music business then this interview is totally fake, Skidmo’ Daily is a biased news source, and yes I will go out with you.”

Freshman Growing a Beard

Freshman Adam McQuaid has decided to grow a beard. When asked why, the McQuaidster said “I don’t know, it just felt like the right thing to do. That, and I forgot my razor back home.”

McQuaid claims that, but Skidmo’s hard-hitting investigative reporters have found out the truth by asking old high school classmates. Milan Lucic, a freshman at High Point University and McQuaid’s old schoolmate, claims that “McQuaidy has been trying to grow that thing for three years straight now. Never got past looking like pube hair in high school,” said Lucic.

Unfortunately for McQuaid, even though he deleted all photos of himself in high school off of Facebook, not everyone else followed the lead. Thus pictures remain online as concrete proof of McQuaid’s struggle to grow a beard thanks to “friends” such as Lucic. “You know, Adam’s a great guy and everything. I just wish that his mom told him that his beard looked terrible.”

“I did,” said momma McQuaid.

McQuaid plans on being an English major potentially with a minor in anything ranging from music (acoustic guitar) to psychology. “It’s just that, with this beard I’m growing, I feel like I’m really growing my confidence and my consciousness. I think that a beard is the right look for me, and I’m sure everyone will agree with me soon,” said McQuaid.

Not soon enough, if our sources are to be believed.

STAFF

*George Lubitz, Editor-in- Chief

*Doug Patrick, Content Director & Deputy Editor

*Jacob Schwartz, Secretary

*Pauline Dent, Publicist

*Nick Papazian, Treasurer

skidmodaily.com

Like us on Facebook

Submit to skidmodaily@gmail.com